DEDICATION

A law review is concerned primarily with research, presentation and analysis of the law. Rarely does a review deal directly with the personalities who shape and mold the course of the law. When an exception is made to that general rule it is because the life and accomplishments of the person so noted symbolize the moral and intellectual strength that sustains the legal profession. This Issue of the Dickinson Law Review is dedicated to the memory of the late Chief Justice of the Pennsylvania Supreme Court, Charles Alvin Jones. Simply to state the record of his life and contribution to the jurisprudence of this State is to explain our purpose in commemorating him and our pride in being able to do so. The articles by Mr. Justice Benjamin R. Jones and Mr. Laurence H. Eldredge, which follow, state with more authority and eloquence than can be capsulized here the respect, admiration and affection with which the Chief Justice was regarded by those who knew him. To the edification of those who did not know him personally and to the obvious esteem in which his associates hold his memory, this Issue is dedicated.

CHARLES ALVIN JONES
